

J-Lube is a cheap, easy-to-make, latex safe, and incredibly slippery lubricant that is particularly good for getting large objects up your butt. Simply put, it's a white powder that when added to water makes a great lube. It's mainly used by veterinarians as an obstetrical lubricant (birthing large animals).

J-Lube is a strange high tech, long chain polyethylene polymer. It takes some practice to get adept in its use, but more than worth the time experimenting to get the perfect blend for you!

One 8oz. container of J-Lube makes an amazing six to eight gallons of lube.

A Warning from J-Lube:

CAUTION: Leakage of this product into the peritoneal cavity may cause illness and/or death.

Mr. S Suggests: If you are new to larger toys or fisting, or are stretching past your limit, consider trying a different powder based lube like K-Lube or Fist Powder. Both of these powder-based alternates are extremely slick and designed with gay men in mind - perfect for beginner pigs.

RECOMENDED MIXING INSTRUCTIONS:

Mix 1/8 cup J-Lube to 1-1/2 cup water – it can be mixed with a hand-held blender or shaken in a jar. Adjust the consistency by adding water or J-Lube until the consistency is workable.

Mixing in a blender:

Put the water in first, turn the blender on, and then add the powder a little at a time. As the mixture starts to thicken TURN UP the speed or you will burn the motor out. Some people never bother measuring the amount of powder. Using a blender may create lube bubbles/froth. These dissipate over time.

Clean up:

It washes off quickly if you use table salt instead of soap!

TIPS AND TRICKS

- ▶ It works best when it's mixed thick.
- ▶ Make small quantities, since it doesn't keep well – and you don't really need 6 gallons of lube sitting around, do you? Make it fresh, or keep it in the fridge up to three weeks.
- ▶ Cold water is best for mixing. The use of warm water can cause the powder to clump.
- ▶ Don't want cold J-Lube? Place the prepared J-Lube container in a bowl of warm/hot water for a few minutes.
- ▶ Freezing & thawing it after mixing, and before using takes care of any lumps and makes it a thicker mixture.

WHAT ARE SOME WAYS TO APPLY J-LUBE?

- ▶ Fill a syringe or a plastic bottle equipped with a long, narrow tube (Douche bulbs are great for this) with your prepared J-Lube. Insert up a butt and give it a good squeeze. Put some on your hand and arm and off you go!
- ▶ A normal squeeze bottle with a top that closes works well. Check the hair-care area at your drugstore.
- ▶ Frozen J-Lube cubes! These melt quickly and can be a welcome relief to a well-used hole after an evening of play! You can use Popsicle molds, too.
- ▶ Try putting J-Lube powder in a cup and water in another. Dip your fingers into the dry and apply to the butt, then dip your fingers into the water; presto! Dip your fingers into the water when you need to refresh. This is an easy way to play with J-Lube without making a full batch.

CAN YOU MIX J-LUBE AND CRISCO?

Mix 1/4 cup of J-Lube with 1/4 cup of water. Mix this with one half of a 3-lb can of Crisco in a food processor (or in a bowl with a spoon), then add the rest of the can of Crisco and finish mixing it. Refrigerate or freeze it until playtime.
